

Being able to turn on and off wiretapping with extreme ease only takes us one step closer to government by the government, for the government. As Americans, we have a duty to stand against any violation or process for easy violation of our civil liberties.

Wiretapping, while necessary, should not be something that is conducted at the drop of a hat. The potential for misuse is too great. A wiretap should only be instated after all the due process requirements are met. The ability to go to an ISP and have them flip a switch to immediately implement monitoring of an individual is simply too much. Our government's checks and balances were instated for a reason, and I feel that as an American, I have a duty to stand against any process that threatens to tear those checks and balances of power apart. Thank you
